

Favorite Scripture

Do you have a favorite Bible verse besides Acts 2:38? My personal favorite is John 11:35, which is the shortest verse in the Bible.

---

John 11:35 (KJV): Jesus wept.

---

Lazarus was dear to Jesus, like a brother from youth. Their bond was unbreakable, and their moments together were cherished. Picture them in playful times, engaging in all sorts of games, except perhaps hide-and-seek, for what would be the point when facing the all-knowing Son of God? He would know where you hid before you even found your hiding spot.

Why did Jesus shed tears? Some see it as an expression of His deep-seated empathy, feeling the collective heartbreak over Lazarus's passing. There's also the concept that His tears reflected a divine frustration, seeing skepticism linger even after His miraculous deeds. Or maybe His sorrow was preemptive, aware that resurrecting Lazarus would accelerate His path towards the cross, where He would triumph over sin and mortality.

Though interpretations vary, one thing is undisputable: Jesus's tears illustrate that despite His divine essence, He was profoundly touched by human feelings and understood the depth of our emotions. This relatability of His emotions makes us feel understood and not alone in our struggles.

This simple verse conveys a mighty truth: Jesus is not a distant deity; He is an intimate ally who suffers with us, accompanying us through each ordeal and offering us comfort in our times of need.

X Tweets:

- John 11:35 (KJV): Jesus wept. Even in the shortest verse, we find profound empathy and understanding. 🌧️
#JesusWept #Empathy
- John 11:35 (KJV): Jesus wept. Tears of Jesus reflect His deep connection to humanity. He truly feels what we feel, making us never alone. 🤝 #Comfort #Compassion
- John 11:35 (KJV): Jesus wept. His sorrow wasn't just for Lazarus; it was for all of us, reminding us that He stands by us in our struggles. 🙏 #Hope #Faith